About the Program

The Leadership Fellows Program is a concentrated three-tiered initiative designed to expose undergraduates to leadership and management training by providing theoretical and pragmatic experiences. This AKA program which began in 1979, provides leadership training and helps undergraduates develop the skills necessary to assume job responsibilities in the workplace. The program is three-tiered with the following goals and objectives: (1) training and development; (2) student internships; and (3) job placement and mentoring. At the end of the program, participants are required to formally present case studies on various business related scenarios. Several members of AKA's top leadership team participate in the program and serve as mentors. Also, top executives from Tyson present workshops and assist students by providing them with information for their case study projects.
